Dr Dan Hughes

Dan Hughes is a clinical psychologist who resides in Lebanon, PA, USA, with an office in nearby Annville.

After receiving his PhD in Clinical Psychology from Ohio University, he fairly quickly began specialising in the treatment of children and youth who had experienced abuse and neglect and for the most part now manifested serious psychological problems secondary to childhood trauma and attachment disorganisation. Not having much success helping these children with traditional treatments, he developed an attachment focused treatment that relied heavily on the theories and research of attachment and intersubjectivity to guide his model of treatment and parenting. He is the author of three books, including Building the Bonds of Attachment, 2nd edition (2006) and Attachment-Focused Family Therapy (2007). He has provided training and consultations to therapists, social workers and parents throughout the US, Canada, UK and Australia and provides regular training at Colby College in Maine, Annville, PA, USA and London, UK.

Seminar Program

Auckland, Wellington

The seminar will present an overview of the crucial role of a secure attachment and intersubjectivity in a child's neurological, affective, cognitive, and behavioural development. Their place in enabling a child to resolve traumatic experiences, develop affect regulation and reflective functioning, and establish a coherent narrative will also be explored. Principles and strategies of psychotherapy and daily care which utilize attachment and intersubjectivity will be presented and discussed. This model of intervention will be demonstrated with videos of treatment sessions.

The presentation will include DVDs of treatment sessions, case examples, limited discussion and questions, as well as handouts.

For a more complete outline of the program for both the seminar and the workshop, visit the website at www.fcconventions.com.au/child2010/dhlt.html
